The Origin of MONEY.

IN the year of Rome 482, and before Christ 266, during the time of the Roman commonwealth, silver was coined at Rome. Hitherto the Romans had used no money in commerce, except pieces of brass stamped with the figure of a bull, a ram, and a boar; but this year they began to coin silver, and introduce it into commerce. The place appointed for the mint was the temple of Juno Moneta; from the word Moneta is derived the word MONEY.

WINTER.

WHILE mix'd with fleecy clouds of snow,
Rough tempests threat, and whirlwinds blow;
While to his cot, with wild affright,
The peasant wings his hasty flight;

The Planet VENUS is Evening-Star to the 20th of October, from thence Morning-Star to the Year's End.

There safe their drooping pinions close,
And tremble while the whirlwind blows;
Then forth, with all his gloomy train,
Stern Winter rushes o'er the plain.

NIGHT. A POEM.

NOW sable Night extends her gloom around,
And spreads her shady pinions o'er the ground,
While slumb'ring chiefs of bloody battles dream,
And courtship is the sleeping virgin's theme:
The feather'd choir forget their tuneful lay,
The toiling steer the labours of the day.

A very extraordinary Anecdote relative to Sir William Windham.

SIR William Windham, when a very young Man, had been out one day at a ſtag-hunt; in returning from the ſport, he found ſeveral of the ſervants at his father's gate, ſtanding round a fortune-teller, who pretended, at leaſt, to be deaf and dumb, and for a ſmall gratification wrote on the bottom of a trencher, with a bit of chalk, anſwers to ſuch queſtions as the men and maids put to him by the ſame method. As Sir William rode by, the conjurer made ſigns that he was inclinable to tell his fortune, as well as the reſt; and in good humour he would have complied, but not readily finding a queſtion to aſk, the conjurer took the trencher, and writing upon it, gave it back with theſe words very legible, "Beware of a White Horſe!"—Sir William ſmiled at the abſurdity of the man, and thought no more of it for ſeveral years.

But in the year 1690, being on his travels in Italy, and accidentally at Venice, as he was one day paſſing through St. Mark's place in his calaſh, he obſerved more than an ordinary crowd at one corner of it. He deſired his driver to ſtop, and they found it was occaſioned by a mountebank, who alſo pretended to tell fortunes; conveying his ſeveral predictions to the people by means of a long narrow tube of tin, which he lengthened or curtailed at pleaſure, as occaſion required.

Among others, Sir William held up a piece of money; upon which the ſoothſayer immediately directed the tube to his carriage, and ſaid to him very diſtinctly, in Italian, "Signior Ingleſe, cavete il bianco Cavallo!" which in Engliſh is, "Mr. Engliſhman, beware of a White Horſe!" Sir William immediately recollected what had been before told him, and took it for granted that the Britiſh fortune-teller had made his way over to the continent, where he had found his ſpeech; and was curious to know the truth of it. However, upon enquiry, he was aſſured that the preſent fellow had never been out of Italy, nor did he underſtand any language but his mother tongue.—Sir William was ſurprized, and mentioned ſo whimſical a circumſtance to ſeveral people. But in a ſhort time this alſo went out of his head, like the former prediction of the ſame kind.

We need inform few of our readers of the ſhare which Sir William Windham had in the tranſactions of the British government, during the last four years of Queen Ann; in which a design to restore the son of James the Second to that throne, which his father had forfeited, was undoubtedly concerted; and, on King George's arrival, punished, by forcing into banishment, or putting in prison, all the persons suspected to have entered into the combination; among the latter of these was Sir William Windham, who, in the year 1715, was committed prisoner to the Tower.

On the inner gate were the arms of Great-Britain, in which there was now some alteration to be made, in consequence of the succession of the house of Brunswick; and just as Sir William's chariot was passing through to carry him to his prison, the painter was at work, adding the White Horse, the arms of the Elector of Hanover. It struck Sir William forcibly; he immediately recollected the two singular predictions, and mentioned them to the Lieutenant of the Tower, then in the chariot with him, and to almost every one who came to see him in his confinement; and, though not superstitious, he always spoke of it as a prophecy fully accomplished. But here he was mistaken (if there is any thing prophetic in it) for many years after, being out a hunting, he had the misfortune of being thrown from his saddle in leaping a ditch, by which accident he broke his neck. He rode upon a White Horse.

Select MAXIMS.

ENDEAVOUR to be religious without superstition, just without rigour, merciful without partiality, cautious without fear, valiant without rashness, and great without pride.

To superiors give respect, deference and submission; to equals affection and confidence; to every body sincerity, and all the service in your power.

Be civil to all, serviceable to many, familiar with few, a friend to one, and an enemy to none.

Emulation is a noble passion; it is enterprizing, but yet just; because it strives to excel, only by raising itself, and not by depressing another.

It is a pitiful sneaking sort of life, that of a backbiter, always to be pecking at and feeding upon the imperfections of others.

Beware of that man who is morose, sordid and brutish to an extreme. He envies the prosperity of all, especially that of his neighbour, and will with tranſport embrace every occaſion to injure, though he ſhould reap no advantage from the injury done.

He that envieth, maketh another man's virtue his vice, and another's happineſs his torment; whereas, he that rejoiceth at the proſperity of another, is partaker of the ſame.
